I am a biologist with several years of experience, currently working in agricultural and horticultural sciences. My focus includes entomology, biomonitoring, and ecotoxicological research. I appreciate interdisciplinary studies, such as examining the role and significance of invertebrates in agriculture. I am constantly looking for new ideas for research, I am extremely curious about the world around me.

I am eager to share my skills in planning and conducting applied and experimental sciences. Whether it's solving intriguing research problems or crafting scientific texts, I am here to help. PhD students working with me can expect personalized support to enhance their knowledge and skills in my field or a related scientific area. I highly value individuals who demonstrate initiative, creativity, and a willingness to tackle challenges.

On a personal note, I enjoy long hikes and good literature in my free time.
