I am a veterinarian by education, and a scientist by passion. I love to identify scientific problems and then look for solutions in a laboratory. This gives me unlimited possibilities for experimenting and implementing even the most unusual ideas. I am passionate about experimental and comparative oncology. In my work, I try to develop new diagnostic and therapeutic solutions for animals suffering from cancer. I always approach my tasks with full commitment and earnestness but the scientific work itself is for me, above all, great fun and a way of spending my time creatively! Privately, I love nature and spend my free time outdoors in the company of my animals. I am an open, understanding and patient person.

If you want to learn the secrets of scientific work (how to formulate research hypotheses, plan and perform experiments, write all forms of publications) in an engaging and interesting way by asking questions and looking for answers – feel free to contact me.
