Implementation of the idea of sustainable development in functioning of cities and regions is a subject that interests me both professionally and personally. The multitude of issues in a sustainable city means that it is not enough to be an expert in one area, because there is a need of systematic approach to different aspects of a city as a living organism. And that's what turns me on. I like to get distracted and learn about the broader context of the issues I'm dealing with. Many of these new aspects will remain in my head as fun facts, but some of them will turn out to be a fantastic new territory to explore scientifically.

This is also the approach I would like to impart to the person with whom I will have the pleasure to work. If, however, my experience does not allow us to cooperate on a scientific level, I will be happy to work on personal sphere. I would like us to function consciously and authentically, and our communication to be on a low level of formality. I look forward to working with someone who is independent and convinced that they would like to improve their quality of life.
